

New Office for Arup Scotland

haa design's proposals for an extension to Arup Scotland's new offices in South Queensferry are now on-site. The proposals include a full refurbishment to Arup's Grade B listed original building, designed in 1967 by Arup Associates' Peter Fogo, and a new 600m<sup>2</sup> extension complementing the original building across the walled garden.

The Peter Fogo building, designed as a simple symmetrical pavilion, makes up what was the fourth wall of the original kitchen garden of old Scotstoun House. haa design's extension follows on from this, building right up against and "inhabiting" one of the listed walls. The pavilion building, cleared of outdated toilets and offices, and infilling the courtyard now forms simple open-plan office space. The new building contains a new reception, meeting rooms, toilets and other support functions.

The design of the new building was heavily influenced by what was acceptable to Planning and Historic Scotland, in terms of size, location and main elevation. Both the refurbishment of the main building and the design of the new building reflect Arup's priority that the design should meet the highest possible standards of sustainability and feature wind catchers, solar-tubes and a sophisticated BMS to maximise and regulate cross ventilation via the perimeter glazing and the central cupola built over the original central courtyard.

haa design are currently working on the fit-out of Arup Scotland's Glasgow office which will feature full open plan and a design aesthetic reflecting their recently completed London and Watford offices.

---

Refurbishment of and extension to Scotstoun House South Queensferry

original building	925m <sup>2</sup>
new building	620m <sup>2</sup>
coach house building	95m <sup>2</sup> architect	haa design limited
structural engineer	} Arup Scotland
M&E engineer
sustainability consultant
cost consultant	Neilson Binnie-McKenzie
contractor	Ashwood Scotland Ltd
cost of project	£3.5m (construction current) – Fit-out haa design is a multi-disciplinary practice incorporating architecture, interior design and consultancy services. Established in 1994, the Glasgow based practice is headed by Hugh Anderson.

Further information can be obtained from Lorraine Wyllie at haa design limited on 0141 221 6234.